Sex in the City

in The New York Times Magazine by Susan Morgan, 27 January 2008

Italian curator Emi Fontana talks about Women in the City, the innovative inaugural show from West of Rome, a nonprofit arts organization Fontana has just launched in Los Angeles. Fontana says she "thinks big," and Women in the City, which features breakthrough works by female artists such as Jenny Holzer and Louise Lawler, proves her point. Art aficionados won't find the show in a gallery; instead, the works are displayed on video billboards and in public spaces throughout LA. Though she sounds like a fascinating character, this cursory profile doesn't do justice to Fontana or her show.
